In Real Analysis, students’ intuition repeatedly proves incorrect. As they begin to rebuild their intuition correctly, the process of creating precise definitions often causes discouragement. I will describe a few techniques I have used to help my students overcome their discouragement, including homework conferences and specific assignments that allow students to reflect on what they know and explore their understanding from different angles. (Received September 17, 2013)