Claims of the form “\((x+y)^n = x^n + y^n\)” are high on every mathematics educator’s list of common, egregious algebra errors. A simple classroom activity involving manipulatives can connect the algebraic symbols to their underlying geometric meanings and pave the way for a look at Pascal’s triangle, combinations, and the binomial theorem. (Received September 25, 2018)