
How do we engage our students in writing clear, concise, and well-structured proofs? How do we do this in large classes? Is it enough to provide careful definitions and well-constructed examples in class? We will discuss ways of providing careful analysis and feedback for student solutions during classes with large lectures via proofreading and how such critiques lead to productive theoretical discussion and faster mastery of the subject matter. (Received September 17, 2019)