Standard SIR epidemiological models have the property that the infectious population numbers only go to zero as $t \to \infty$. We demonstrate, by an explicit construction, that models can be formulated such that $I(t)$ becomes zero at a finite time. Both analytical and numerical results are given to support this conclusion. (Received September 05, 2009)