A team of University of Wisconsin-Platteville math faculty initiated a two-year state-funded project with college students and area high school teachers to improve students' transition from high school to college math. The goal was to increase student success in their first college math class. To better understand our students, we surveyed students in selected lower level mathematics courses. Student participation was voluntary, and all data collected was self reported by the students. We wish to share the results of our surveys. (Received September 25, 2012)
