

1154-A5-2818 Kendra E Pleasant (kendra.pleasant@morgan.edu) and Ahlam Tannouri. What Active Learning Looks Like at Morgan State University.

Culturally responsive teaching (CRT) is a teaching pedagogy that involves using the students' personal experiences and backgrounds to influence the course design. At Morgan State University, we are using this idea to construct a set of five principles that governs the classroom atmosphere and influences the problem selection. We incorporated CRT into the department through a pilot program including five faculty members and one graduate student. We are now in the process of expanding CRT to the entire mathematics department. We will share a set of examples or study cases used in the classroom. We will also discuss the response CRT has gotten from the faculty and students. (Received September 18, 2019)